Dear Yang Sun,

Congratulations! We are delighted to inform you that your submission to ACL 2025, Learning First-Order Logic Rules for Argumentation Mining, has been accepted to the main conference.

Please read carefully the following information about the next steps.

Camera-ready papers

The camera-ready version of your paper is due on May 30, 2025. Please incorporate the feedback from your final reviews, which can be viewed on your OpenReview submission page: https://openreview.net/forum?id=cPPFd1e0rf If you received ethics reviews, please pay particular attention to the reviewers' recommendations when revising your paper.

In the camera-ready paper, you are allowed to include one additional page of content (up to 9 pages for long papers, up to 5 pages for short papers) to address reviewers' comments. As with your original submission, you may have up to one page for limitations (required) and optionally ethical considerations, plus unlimited pages of references. To submit your final camera-ready paper, go to your OpenReview submission page and use the Edit dropdown in the top right to select Final Revision.

In-person vs virtual presentation

When submitting your camera ready, please also let us know if you will be presenting your paper in person or virtually. Note that your paper needs to be presented at the conference, either in person or virtually, in order for it to be included in the proceedings.

Uploading materials on Underline

All papers that are presented at the conference will need to upload a recorded video, slides and a poster on Underline. The requirements are the same for all presenters, regardless of the presentation format or in-person/virtual attendance. So all accepted papers need to have these materials uploaded. The deadline for this is June 29, 2025.

Detailed instructions on preparing and uploading your materials to Underline are available here:

Oral vs. poster presentations

Decisions about oral vs. poster presentations will be made after the camera-ready papers have been submitted. We will then notify you of your presentation mode.

Registration requirement

Note that there is a registration requirement for all papers presented at the conference. More information is available here:

Congratulations once again, and we look forward to seeing you at ACL 2025!
